Presentations for Evaluation Reporting; Making Results Plain for a Live Audience

Mr. Lennox will describe and demonstrate strategies for making presentations come alive, including strong slide deck design and effective use of body language and voice. Illustrations will be drawn from recent Cornell evaluation projects and beyond.

Wednesday, May 6, 2015, 12:00 – 1:00pm
Mann Library Room 102
Light refreshment will be served.

David has teaching and research interests in persuasion, visual communication, speech delivery and intercultural communication. He holds a master’s degree in English and an MBA from the Peter F. Drucker School of Management in Claremont, CA. Prior to joining Cornell, Lennox taught at Walla Walla College, the University of Washington, and Central Washington University-Lynnwood, and served as a technical educator for Internap Network Services, and has consulted for organizations such as Kennedy Nelson Shultz Communications and the Port of Seattle. This fall David will begin an appointment as Senior Lecturer of Management Communication for the Dyson School of Applied Economics and Management.

The Cornell Evaluation Network is membership driven and organized. For more information contact Margaret Johnson: maj35@cornell.edu
